Adobe Illustrator is a vector graphics editor used to create illustrations and design layouts for print and the web. Its features include an unlimited canvas, vector tools (including the ability to edit paths and create custom shapes), and raster-based tools (including the ability to paint, edit objects, and adjust color). Adobe Illustrator is a tool for the graphic designer, although it's widely used to create other sorts of graphics for marketing and other purposes as well. Both Photoshop and Illustrator have their limitations. For example, both have problems with resizing objects, and both cannot easily move the text along a path, or copy and paste text from one file to another. However, they both have superior functions, such as those of color editing. A third program, Adobe Fireworks, is designed to be an easy-to-use graphic editing tool that allows you to create and arrange graphics for the web, and layout your own printed materials. Fireworks offers most of the features of Photoshop and Illustrator with additional options that enable you to export vector-based designs to other programs for further color and illustration manipulation. Project Summary Sporadic amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (SALS) is the most common motor neuron disease. Neurotoxic, inflammatory, and immune markers are found in SALS muscle, but the immune and inflammatory processes responsible for the loss of muscle have yet to be identified. This is due in part to the fact that only mature human muscle can be obtained for study. We previously showed that skeletal muscle cells isolated from ALS-FRS patient muscle showed increased responses to cytokines compared to control muscle and produced more of the proinflammatory cytokine interleukin-6 (IL-6) in response to interferon- $\gamma$ , a cytokine known to cause ALS in mice. Based on these data, and other preliminary data we obtained in patients, we hypothesized that, in SALS muscle, increased levels of IL-6 may contribute to motor neuron vulnerability in ALS. My preliminary data suggest that astrocytes are a likely source of IL-6, and that they are chronically activated in SALS patients and produce a higher level of IL-6 than control subjects. I propose to study this hypothesis through the following Specific Aims: 1) To determine whether IL-6 in the CSF of ALS patients is due to glial cells in the central nervous system. 2) To determine whether the production of IL-6 by astrocytes in SALS patients is increased and whether this is due to an increase in expression of the IL-6 gene. 3) To determine whether long-term in-vivo intramuscular treatment with IL-6 in ALS-FRS patients is therapeutic. This will be accomplished by two Specific Aims. Aim 3.1: To determine whether IL-6 is delivered to the spinal cord of ALS-FRS patients and is able to cause degeneration of spinal motor neurons. Aim 3.2: To determine the effect of IL-6 on muscle strength in ALS-FRS patients. I anticipate that these studies will improve our understanding of the pathology of SALS and provide an interventional target for the treatment of ALS patients. Because the proposed research uses well-established SALS patient samples and is translational in nature, this proposal is highly likely to lead to successful peer-reviewed funding, with the potential for future clinical trials. But city Hall said no, noting that the company is not allowed to pay drivers bonuses during these weeks
