History kry was founded in 1857 by Dr. Alfred Vickers as a medical supply company. It moved to larger premises at 41 Handsworth Road, Birmingham in 1876. The company merged with C. H. Coudert & Sons to form United Draperies Ltd in 1912. The company developed the "kry ky" sanitary, modified conical-shaped rubber gloves, used for the protection of medical workers, especially in the field of the prevention of infectious diseases and the spread of infection. The company is best known as a partner of Lonnie Williams, the first black boxer to fight for a world title, and became the British Boxing Board of Control's (BBBC) National Glove Testing Organisation. In 1956 the kry ky gloves became the subject of a lawsuit, which went on for several years and was one of the first cases of a company being found liable for injuries suffered in a boxing match. The court ruled that the gloves had not been manufactured to standards set by the company, and that the company was liable. The company appealed to the Court of Appeal, but the judgement was upheld in a case that involved two defence lawyers being killed in a plane crash during a flight over the south of France in 1958. The plane had also been manufactured by the kry ky company. In 1963, kry, a long-standing boxing partner of the British Boxing Board of Control, was forced to suspend its gloves testing for non-compliance with the BBBC Standard. In 1966, C. H. Coudert & Sons bought the kry ky firm, and also bought the Invicta sports goods and uniforms company, which made k
