Maybe denim shorts? Nah. Maybe a high-waisted, short-sleeved blouse with a belt? Probably something like that. But, actually, what I wore was a pair of red-white-and-blue plaid shorts, a red-white-and-blue collarless plaid shirt, and a red-white-and-blue ribbon tie with the school crest. I wore the shorts to school as often as I could, all winter long, in spite of the fact that even by the fall of fourth grade I was beginning to suspect, along with the rest of America, that I was female. I had a vivid memory of that Christmas Day when, after midnight mass, our class had been released from the gymnasium and sent off to brush our teeth (our mothers had made our powdered-sugar-peanut-butter Santa Clauses, and Mr. Ward was handing them out on a tray), in the middle of which a clear, boisterous voice rang out: "What are the different kinds of cookies?" There was a pause as we looked around and saw that it was the boy from the Tar Box line. He was addressing the other boys, but I could hear it clearly, even as I tried to look as if I knew what he was talking about. "Biscuits? Rolled oats?" I went pale and shook my head. "Flaxseed?" "Oh, that's good." "Coconut?" "No, really, thank you." "Peanut
