We have written previously about the slow creep of US money holdings back into the financial system. Now the Reserve Bank of New Zealand has released the latest inflation-inflation forward guidance, which again confirms the rapid pace of this rise. The banking regulator is also capping rates at 4.5% instead of the 6% previously suggested. It gets worse. Even as the real economy weakens, the government is proposing further austerity measures, including the scrapping of capital gains tax on housing and a 5% boost in GST to 20%. The end result is inevitable – a rise in the cost of living. It means that with lower real incomes, our spending power on items like food, services, health, education, houses and other assets will be squeezed further. As a result, the growth in real incomes will be weak. This is even before the impact of interest rates, which will reduce the amount of money available for spending. To compound the problem, there is no sign of a rebound in economic activity. The August trade balance is running at a quarterly deficit, reversing the previous couple of quarters. There is now as much room for growth as there is room for contraction. All this, against a backdrop of deteriorating labour market conditions, rising unemployment and low inflation. So what will the economy look like in 2013? Despite the bleak outlook, the Reserve Bank is likely to remain patient. As a result, it will almost certainly keep rates on hold. It will also maintain its approach of increasing the assets it holds, or reserves, through a reinvestment program. Furthermore, as there is still no sign of a sharp rebound in growth, there will be little possibility of vigorous labour market correction with higher unemployment. In the end, this will result in the stock of reserves growing at a e79caf774b

MURDOCK The Cartoonist A Washington Post columnist announced that she has finally learned to embrace the season of giving, after learning of an unlikely source of inspiration - her dog's love for her. "April kicks off National Dog Month, and I am dog-obsessed," Jean Christophe Natella wrote on April 8, 2017. "I've devoted a monthly column to my dog Amanda, and I love that she is part Labrador. I have a Labrador in my life that I adore." "This month's column is dedicated to having my beloved Amanda thank me
