The software reads the results and provides the following information: . . . When you click on each of the graphs for the DNBs, the respective graph will appear on the right. . . . Each DNB is represented by a small dot. The more DNBs that are found, the larger the dot in the graph. . . . The algorithm detects DNBs of length x 20 basepairs (bp) or longer with greater than 80% confidence and is a typical 5% false positive error rate. This likely represents a large majority of DNBs. While the human identification threshold of 37 base pairs is selected as the tradeoff between the sensitivity and the false positive rate. the smaller molecules may be subject to more errors. He has been working in Dallas for the last 10 years. He has worked with some amazing chefs including Scott Peacock (Proof), Marc McElligott (up), and most recently at International Smoke with Christopher Elia. He has worked at all different levels of fine dining – from the bottom all the way up and down the escalator. He is also a mad Meatball Chef. He started his career working in a Puerto Rican BBQ joint for 3 years. After that he took a job in a Mexican BBQ joint in Dallas. It was here that he started his quest to be the best meatball chef in Dallas. He has not stopped there – in the past year he has worked for Chris Elia in the newly opened International Smoke and in the past two months he has worked at Marc's En Fuego. He now is the Executive Chef at District. He has a bit of a dual personality. He is a perfectionist and a hopeless romantic at the same time. If he does not meet his deadlines and don't get enough sleep, he will cry.Q: How to pivot a pandas df with an arbitrary number of columns?
