Serotonergic dysfunction in bipolar disorder and the role of 5-HT receptor agonists. Bipolar disorder (BD) is a mood disorder for which treatments are limited. Serotonergic dysfunction is suggested to be involved in the aetiology and pathophysiology of BD, a theory that receives support from the finding that BD patients have been shown to have reduced blood concentrations of the serotonin metabolite 5-hydroxyindoleacetic acid (5-HIAA) as well as reduced numbers of serotonin-immunoreactive neurones in the raphe nuclei and reduced 5-HT_{2A} receptor binding. Importantly, reduced 5-HT_{2A} receptor binding in the raphe nuclei has been correlated with core symptoms of BD. The 5-HT_{2A} receptor has emerged as a potential target for the treatment of BD and attention is being paid to 5-HT_{2A} receptor agonists, including the atypical antipsychotic medications, which are the mainstay of current treatment of the acute phase of BD. However, side effects may limit long-term use and newer options are needed. This review discusses recent developments in the area of serotonergic dysfunction in BD as well as the potential of 5-HT_{2A} receptor agonists in the treatment of BD.
