Pedro Jose Muniz, the 25-year-old Brazilian cyclist who had his career end after being hit by a car, was killed Thursday. The runner, 26-year-old Gary Ortiz Jr., was walking near a crosswalk at Woodburn Road and Oaklawn Avenue in Fairview Heights at about 6:15 p.m. when he was hit, according to police. Muniz, who trained at the University of Hawaii in 2013 and was sponsored by the legendary Jan Ullrich — who was in attendance at a Nov. 7 race in Italy — was hospitalized after a collision at the end of a race in Italy. He was in stable condition at a hospital outside London, England, where the accident took place. The crash caused a 37-minute, 20-kilometer race to be canceled. The next day, the International Cycling Union stripped him of his world championship road race title. BRAZIL'S MUNIZ, UH CRASHING SAVE: ATHLETES WOULD BE DOUBLE VICTIMS Muniz was traveling at 38 mph when he was hit. His bike was angled toward the oncoming traffic, according to the police report. Ortiz was taken to a local hospital with what police said were non-life-threatening injuries. "His speed at the time of the incident was unknown," police wrote in the report. "However, due to recent media reports the collision occurred while running in the opposite direction of the same crosswalk where the collision occurred and this may have played a factor in the incident." Muniz, who started racing in 2004, had been scheduled to run the annual Queen City Classic marathon Aug. 31, but had pulled out to travel to Italy for the cycling world championships. Ortiz was scheduled to run in the Queen City 5K Aug. 31. Muniz's teammates, who were at the annual race, celebrated his life on social media. "We are devastated. We ran with @pedropaulo. It was quite a
