The evaluation of spasticity is often difficult in children because the child must cooperate to allow the examination. For instance, spasticity may be easily detected in the wrist or the ankle spasm during passive joint mobilization, but the child may not spontaneously flex or extend a limb for 2 seconds. Few children do this. In some children, spasticity is the only sign of neurologic disorder (for example, Pelizaeus-Merzbacher disease).

Many other conditions are associated with spasticity, and it is essential to distinguish between the various conditions and to use a relevant scoring system. In this article, we discuss the assessment and management of spasticity in children, including the following areas: (1) assessment of spasticity; (2) related disorders; (3) therapeutic approaches; and (4) physiologic assessment. Belts can be used to reliably and accurately guide, control and drive certain types of machinery. As such, belts have been developed for a number of applications. Belts are used in a number of different industries and applications, such as the automotive industry, for example. However, existing belts can provide for a number of problems. In the automotive industry, for example, belt systems can be highly complex and can include a number of sub-components. These sub-components can include idlers and tensioners, rollers and guide rollers, and tensioning devices and transfer rollers.

Additionally, existing belts can be subject to changes in tension during operation. A 45-year-old Pakistani man has been killed during a clash between two political groups after he was accused of offering Rs5,000 to each of them for supporting a political candidate. The incident occurred in Lahore on Sunday. The deceased was identified as Abdur Rehman. He was reportedly shot by Tariq Bokhari, a leading candidate of the PTI. The police said that Bokhari is a member of the National Assembly from the PP-9 constituency of Punjab. According to Police First Information Report (FIR) Abdur Rehman
