Multipartitioning is commonly used for data storage systems, and can improve the operational performance of the data storage system by enabling the data storage system to store data on multiple volumes. In multipartitioning, data is stored on two or more volumes, where the volumes may be locally attached, and/or may be attached to the same storage system as other volumes. Each volume may be a primary volume. A primary volume typically stores all data that are being written to the primary volume, while other volumes typically store redundant copies of data that are stored on the primary volume. For a data storage system having multiple volumes, the operational performance of the data storage system may be improved by storing data from read requests for the volumes on the primary volume, while data stored on the other volumes is accessed as required.

While multiple volumes may be efficiently used by storing data on the primary volume, if a failure occurs in the primary volume, then the data stored on the primary volume may no longer be available for use.

For example, if the primary volume is a storage volume of a data storage system, a failure of the primary volume may cause data stored on the storage volume to be lost.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to semiconductor memory devices, and more particularly, to an array of flash memory cells having independent source and drain terminals and methods of manufacture.

2. Description of the Related Art A conventional N-channel flash EEPROM cell is shown in FIG. 1a. The cell, denoted by reference character 10, includes a substrate 11 of a first conductivity type (e.g., P-type), and a first source 12 and a second source 13 of a second conductivity type (e.g., N-type) formed in a region of the substrate 11, a first channel region 14 of the first conductivity type formed between the first source 12 and the second source 13, a first floating gate 16 formed over the first channel region 14, a second floating gate 17 formed over the first floating gate 16, a tunnel oxide layer 18 formed over the second floating gate 17, and a control gate 19 formed over the tunnel oxide layer 18. since become a billion-dollar business and one of the most enduring ambassadors of Mexican-American culture. The great Herb Alpert died on Saturday, Aug. 18, at the age of 91. As we still recall from our youth, "A Taste of Tijuana" was a popular Saturday morning television show on the ABC Network that was hosted by the band's original lead vocalist, Herb Alpert. After the Tijuana Brass succumbed to an extended stay in California's Topanga Canyon, Alpert -- born Herbert Morton Plant -- took a pair of agents with him on a search for the perfect Mexican restaurant where they could introduce him to the exotic foods and flavors that Mexico had to offer. On that day in 1959, during a festival in Tijuana, Alpert's band played a gig at the old Mayan Restaurant, which had been refurbished for them by a local restaurateur by the name of Bernardo Garcia. They didn't know it at the time, but the old restaurant was about to become a huge success. At the time, the band had gone out for sandwiches and had eaten nothing all day. The musicians, tired and hungry, sat down at the Mexican restaurant, fully expecting a snack. They were stunned to discover that the restaurant had just ordered out-of-this-world specialty foods as far as they were concerned. As Alpert remembers
